After giving myself the cue "the object of interest" I found myself in a small, cramped room full of electronics (wires, buttons, knobs etc.) Everything was technologically advanced/modern (AOL:experimental) but was well used. The room had walls that curved into the ceiling. See attached sketch. The entire room had a greenish tinge to it.

The object was light-colored and was extremely smooth. It's shape was rounded. The shape caused me to take a confusion break: as to whether the "room" was the inside the object or whether the object was in the room. I was not able to resolve this.

Between the outside and the inside of the object was a gap and in this gap was a device/gyro type thing that allowed the inside of the object to be always "upright" regardless of the position of the outside. (ye)

When I cued purpose I heard the scientific term absorption and something that sounded like transition/transformations of states. (?)

The people who made the object looked chinese/oriental. This gave me an AOL of 099's old project so I terminated the session. (AOL 1)
